Built in 1848, Rowan Oak became Nobel-winning author William Faulkner's home in 1930. It is named Rowan Oak after the legend of the rowan tree, which the Celtic people believed harbored safety and protection. Faulkner lived there until his death in 1962. It is now owned by the university and is open for tours.