The "Flying Dutchmen" of Jackson were pilots from the Netherlands who were left without a home after the Germans and Japanese overran the Netherlands and the Netherlands East Indies. General Hap Arnold, head of the US Army Air Force, chose Jackson as their training base during World War 2. Over 30 Dutchmen who were killed in training accidents were killed and are buried in Jackson’s Cedar Lawn Cemetery.